Sinopsis: Britt-Marie, a woman in her sixties, decides to leave her husband and start anew. Having been housewife for most of her life and and living in small backwater town of Borg, there isn't many jobs available and soon she finds herself fending a youth football team.
Cast: Pernilla August, Peter Haber, Anders Mossling, Malin Levanon, Vera Vitali, Olle Sarri, Mahmut Suvakci, Lance Ncube
Genre: Drama, Comedy
Production: SF Studio, Film i Väst, Nordsvensk Filmunderhållning, TV4, Filmkameratene

Keyword: based on novel or book woman director

Even though it doesn't capture the complexity of Britt-Maries character, presented in the book this is still a charming little movie about the angst getting old alone and all of a sudden having to build your own life after living 40 years for someone else.

I don't think that I've ever seen a movie that so completely fails to evoke any emotions whatsoever.

Bland acting from otherwise good actors and a script so simple that the end credits seem like poetry in comparison.

The idea is not bad (and I assume that the book on which the film is based upon is is way better than this), but for some strange reason the movie fails in every possible way.

The two-dimensional characters (with the slight exception of Mahmut Suvakci's) are so boring, unnatural and non-credible that every attempt at creating emotions with the audience fails time and time again.

So, when the move is over and the story about a woman whose only wish is to be seen ends, I realize that I really couldn't care less. I never really noticed her, never really cared.

A teenage dance movie. It is about a girl who wants to succeed in Brodway but a slight error truncates her dream causing her to return to her town and rehearse some girls to take them to a competition where she tries to recover her dream. Predictable like all of its kind. It has pleasant moments that touch your heart. Talk about inclusion and empathy, about overcoming things from the past, humility and friendship. As well as how difficult it is to start being an adult and go for your dreams. Nice to see with the family. The choreographies are performed spectacularly.

The movie is full of jokes and entertainment. But would you like to watch it second time? No. And it declares if you work even harder you'll reach everything, tho it's not true. That's why I found Feel the Beat a little harmful.
